Notes for JOHAN PHILIP FRITZ:
[Fritz.FTW]

The ship "Lydia" on which Johan sailed, started at Rotterdam, to Dover, and on to Philadelphia. Records of that time period indicate that the trip took its toll on the passengers. The journey typically started in May, where boats picked up people aLong the Rhine from Heilbronn to Holland. These boats had to pass 26 custom houses, where at some stop, the boats and passengers were examined at the whim of the local officials. In the meantime, the passengers were forced to find food and shelter. The trip to Holland took approximately 4-6 weeks. Once at the port, the passengers might be detained another 5-6 weeks. The trip to Dover may have taken up to two weeks, where the passengers again had to await passage to Philadelphia, which often took another 8-12 weeks depending upon the weather and winds. "This is where the real misery began". The ships were typically packed with passengers, with little or no conveniences. Some ships only had one oil lamp below deck. Storms, disease and ship wrecks were common. ("Pennsylvania Pioneers", Vol. , 1934)

During 1740, six immigrant ships arrived in Philadelphia. The "Lydia", of British registry, arrived in Philadelphia on or about September 27,1740. The ship passenger records indicate that approximately 91 males 'signed' the register, though typically in those times record keeping was not a priority. Also the records donot include females or children under the age of 16. It can be assumed that the ship probably had between 150-200 passengers.

The ship records indicate that Philip could not write, as an "X" is beside his name. Also, the next name listed was Johan Adam Fritz, age 18, who might have been Philip's son. He too could not write.

(Per his letters to her anyway.) She went to her grandfathers farm in Averill, Mi to have the baby, but fell and died three days after giving birth to my mother. (Jewel Isabel Black) My mother was adopted by her Maternal grandmother and step grandfather and none of us children knew any of this story until a few years ago.
